Welcome, and thank you for your interest in our study.

Please read the following information before deciding whether to participate.

About this study: You are invited to participate in a research study about how people evaluate everyday situations. You will read a short story and a topic-selection task, and answer a series of questions about them.

Privacy and data collection: Responses will be collected through Qualtrics, securely stored on [redacted]eDrive, and reported in aggregate for research purposes.

Are there any risks? The story describes a sensitive interpersonal situation that you may find upsetting. If uncomfortable, you can exit the survey at any time and your data will not be collected.

Expected duration: The survey will take approximately 10–15 minutes. You will have up to 60 minutes to complete it.

Contact information: For any questions or concerns about the study, please contact [redacted]

For more details about this study, please read our Participant information sheet.

Participant Consent Form

I have read and understood the Participant Information Sheet you have given me about the research project, and I have had any questions and concerns about the project addressed to my satisfaction. I agree to participate in the project.

INSTRUCTIONS

REMINDER: Please carefully read the story shared in the online post. Consider the circumstances described, and evaluate the behavior of the person who wrote the post (OP) from your own perspective.

Read carefully: Later, you will answer follow-up questions about your judgment.

SCENARIO:

Imagine you came across the following online post:

> We're getting renovations done, so I (42F) and my daughter Leah (16F) stayed with my sister Sarah (27F) for a few days. I was at work during the day, and Leah took the bus to Sarah's after school. Sarah works from home.
> One day last week, Leah was home alone when Sarah texted saying she's running really late and has to work when she gets home. She asked Leah to make dinner — it wasn't a heat-up-leftovers situation, but a full dinner. She told Leah that she had a pizza base, sauce, etc., and asked her to make the pizza and put it in the oven, and also make peanut butter sandwiches for her daughter.

Here is the story again for reference:

We’re getting renovations done, so I (42F) and my daughter Leah (16F) stayed with my sister Sarah (27F) for a few days. I was at work during the day, and Leah took the bus to Sarah’s after school. Sarah works from home.

One day last week, Leah was home alone when Sarah texted saying she’s running really late and has to work when she gets home. She asked Leah to make dinner — it wasn't a heat-up-leftovers situation, but a full dinner. She told Leah that she had a pizza base, sauce, etc., and asked her to make the pizza and put it in the oven, and also make peanut butter sandwiches for her daughter.

Leah said she didn't know how to do all that and couldn't do it. Sarah started getting mad and texted that everything's in the fridge, it's really easy, anyone can do it etc. Leah again said no, sorry — and Sarah didn't reply to that.

After I got home, Leah was upset and told me what happened. Honestly I got a little mad on Leah's behalf too, because sure, she can ask, but my daughter didn't feel comfortable making a full dinner. When Sarah got home I told her Leah was upset and she has no right going off at my daughter, and she's delusional if she thinks Leah is her personal chef.

Sarah got angry with me and we didn't talk much after. Leah and I were going to leave the next day anyway.

I did call Sarah later but she didn't pick up.

Am I in the wrong?
